Future Career Goal: To serve as an advocate of agriculture and influence agricultural policy.

When Riley Branch was in the eighth grade, his school had just re-opened their agricultural education program. He decided to take a chance and enroll in an agriscience class. He loved it so much, he joined FFA as a freshman. Branch believes that success is not measured by the rewards you receive but by the people you help. While he may not have a cabinet full of fancy trophies, he does have the drive, passion and desire to help others see their true potential—the best reward of all. This year, he will have the chance to inspire others to do the same. During his year of service, Branch hopes to connect with FFA members on a personal level and help them discover their passion while experiencing agricultural education to the fullest. He also plans to communicate the message of FFA to stakeholders as clearly as possible throughout the year.
